HELPFUL HINTS

Disk failure can cost you money, time and unnecessary aggravation. Listed below are a few helpful hints to prevent unnecessary data loss.

- Protect your disk from smoke, dust, dirt, liquids, etc. by storing in disk cases.
- Keep disks away from electronic appliances, wires & magnetic paper clip holders.
- Use felt tip pens to write on labels instead of ball point pens or pencils.
- Do not bend or crease the diskette.
- Do not expose to heat (ie. from light coming in windows, car trunks, packages left on doorsteps etc.) - A safe rule of thumb is: if it is too hot for you, it may be too hot for the diskette.
- Do not put fingerprints on the diskette itself (ie. through the window on the diskette casing).

POWER SURGES AND SPIKES

What Are They?

Spikes and surges are fluctuations in your electric current that rise well above the 120V level that operates most of your electrical devices. Surges generally last longer than spikes, but, both usually occur so fast that you do not even notice them. Since most electronic equipment is designed to run on 120V, a spike or surge can severely damage the device, especially over time - just like too much air in a tire. BLOWOUT! EMI/RFI Noise Interference - EMI noise is electro-magnetic interference and RFI noise is radio frequency interference. EMI/RFI noise can be transmitted to your power line by things such as nearby radio and TV stations, loose electrical connections, fluorescent lights etc.

Who Gets Them?

Anyone who plugs his or her device into an electric outlet in a home, office, store, factory, school etc. is prone to having them.

When Do You Get Them?

Depending on your location and the different types of power consumption in your area, you may experience an average of two to five surges a day. Over time, these can add up, causing expensive damage to the device. Surges and spikes can come from: power companies switching their sources, your neighbors consumption, air conditioners, elevators, electrical storms etc. They can come from basically anything that can effect the electric current in your line.

How Do You Prevent Them?

A surge suppressor is a very safe and cost effective way to provide "insurance" that your computer or any other electrical device is protected from these damaging spikes and surges. A surge protector will absorb and divert any excess electricity out the ground line and away from the sensitive device. The investment you make in any one of our quality surge suppressors can save you hundreds or even thousands of dollars in equipment repair, loss of data, not to mention the aggravation involved.
